More than 60 advertisers were clamoring for attention during Super Bowl LVI, but only one message came through loud and clear: The future of business has arrived.

Super Bowl advertising has long been used to peddle mainstay consumer products from beer to chips to soda. But this year those mundane everyday products were outnumbered by several companies that spent big to hype emerging industries, including cryptocurrencies, electric vehicles, online sports betting and the metaverse.

The pandemic has forced many organizations to get creative when collaborating with employees and clients, including venturing into the virtual world known as the metaverse.

More tech-savvy companies are turning to the rapidly expanding digital universe powered by tool such as virtual reality (VR) and augmented reality (AR). The metaverse connects teams in a virtual meeting room meant to mimic the feeling of being in a physical meeting space.

WHEN Topshop announced they were pulling out of their flagship Oxford street shop last year, the fatalistic chatter about the end of the high street gathered colossal momentum. The store was eventually snapped up by Ikea, for £378m, but another hole was left in its wake, with House of Fraser closing down too.

Despite this, almost three in five Brits believe the high street is still important, according to Savoo. They value their sense of community. But do they value it enough to forgo the convenience of online shopping?

Chennai: India could play a bigger role in the metaverse by building the capabilities and skills required to tap its vast opportunity. In fact, the budget proposal of a task force for the Animation, Visual Effects, Gaming, and Comics (AVGC) sector may be a stepping stone towards this, according to industry stakeholders. By 2026, 25% of people will spend at least one hour a day in the metaverse for work, shopping, education, social and/or entertainment, technology forecaster Gartner has estimated. "One of the essential components of the metaverse is that it is more immersive," Anshul Rustaggi.

 The CEO has changed the world – but he faces regulatory, technological and branding troubles in his push to do it again
 It would hardly be hyperbole to say that since its founding in 2004, Facebook has taken over the world – counting more than 50% of the global population as its user base. But after years of domination built on advertising revenue, the company has nearly overnight tried to knock down that empire and build anew.

In his job as a music-mastering engineer, Chris Longwood spends hours making Zoom calls and exchanging emails with artists around the globe to get a new album ready for release. He looks forward to the day he can meet with them in a virtual sound studio, editing tracks in real time.

"I see a future where my clients can put on a headset or glasses and be able to feel like they are in the studio with me," says Mr. Longwood, a 35-year-old who lives in Houston. "We could have real back-and-forth conversations and not have to take turns talking, like on Zoom."

In the run-up to the Assembly elections in five states including Uttar Pradesh, Punjab, Uttarakhand, Goa and Manipur, political parties have taken to digital to talk to their respective voters. This also comes on the back of the Election Commission of India (EC) banning mass gatherings due to the ongoing pandemic. Indian National Congress, for instance, launched its virtual campaign 'Priyanka Ke Saath Live,' where the party's general secretary Priyanka Gandhi interacted with people and addressed their queries through Facebook Live. Similarly, Delhi Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal unveiled the 'Ek Mauka Kejriwal Ko' campaign. With this, he urged the people of Delhi to upload videos (across social media platforms) of all the good work done by the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) in the national capital and appeal to people of other poll-bound states to give the party a chance. He further added that he would invite 50 people for a dinner with him, whose videos become the most viral.

Last week's \$320 billion rout of Facebook shares will just be the beginning of a long decline for the company if it fails to radically overhaul the way it does business to keep up with web3 technologies and the social trends driving them, proponents of the emerging online world order said.

Yet even if the company can pivot towards concepts such as decentralisation and interoperability - web3 features that allow users to maintain ownership and control of their own data, and take that data with them anywhere they want to go - Facebook will still suffer a huge decline in advertising revenues, the proponents say.

The online virtual reality experience that almost every tech giant today wishes to commercially exploit may not catch on

In the 1992 sci-fi dystopia Snow Crash, the author Neal Stephenson imagined a bleak 21st century where the collapse of the global economy had seen governments fall and their power replaced by a few giant businesses. The book is notable for prescience, anticipating the adoption of what was then seen as outlandish technologies like the wireless internet, cryptocurrencies and smartphones, as well as the rise of the gig economy. But it is the book's prophetic vision of "the metaverse" that has revived interest in the work.

The metaverse loosely refers to shared virtual environments that people can access via the Internet. While it is more commonly associated with gaming, non-fungible tokens and cryptocurrencies, these virtual spaces can also make events accessible to those who cannot participate in person - especially during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Sir — Social media has become an inextricable part of our lives. The 21st century saw a meteoric rise in the popularity of platforms like Facebook and Twitter, both of which have a significant number of young users. But nothing lasts forever and the attraction of social media seems to be fading. Recently, Meta lost a chunk of daily users for the first time since its inception. Many young people are disenchanted with Facebook owing to the spread of misinformation and hate speech. Has Mark Zuckerberg's futuristic Metaverse, then, failed to incorporate the voice of its primary stakeholders?

"PAK cik, have you watched Ready Player One, the film?" I was stumped when this young man struck up a conversation while I was waiting for my booster shot at a vaccination centre in Shah Alam recently. He was trying to explain what the metaverse was all about. "Yes, but I did not finish watching it. I felt the film was for kids, really. Is it about some kids playing virtual reality games?" I asked. "Watch it again, pak cik. The crux of the film is about mankind's future in the metaverse," he retorted. Ready Player One (2018) is a story set in a dystopian 2045 that follows young protagonist Wade Watts on his search for an Easter egg in a worldwide virtual reality game, the discovery of which would lead him to inherit the game creator's fortune. I was able to grasp what the metaverse meant after a long-winded explanation by Amran, a young computer programmer. The word "metaverse" refers to a fully realised digital world that exists beyond the one in which we live.

For all the talk about the movies at the Sundance Film Festival, the little secret is that a good chunk of the Utah event's appeal lies elsewhere.

The annual gathering in mountain-ringed Park City is, of course, a place where film stars, film producers and film fans gather for 11 days each January to watch films, deal films and hobnob about films. But for the briefest moment each winter, what Sundance really offers is the chance to plunge into a hermetic world of seemingly computer-generated beauty in which everything else feels very far away.

Under quarantine for COVID-19 exposure, Garret Bernal and his family missed a recent Sunday church service. So he strapped on a virtual reality headset and explored what it would be like to worship in the metaverse.

Without leaving his home in Richmond, Va., he was soon floating in a 3-D outer-space wonderland of pastures, rocky cliffs and rivers, as the avatar of a pastor guided him and others through computer-generated illustrations of Biblical passages that seemed to come to life as they prayed.

Imagine you're sitting in your living room in the not-too-distant future but instead of reaching for your phone, you slip on virtual-reality glasses. Now you're looking at your digital living room, in your digital home, with all your digital things around you.

On the wall are photos you snapped with your kids barely half an hour ago; with a swipe of your hand you could change them for, say, images from this day five years ago; or some Rothko paintings. In fact, with a swipe of your hand, you could change anything in your digital living room.

Facebook's parent company Meta wants to reposition itself for the metaverse, and it's spending heavily to do so. But for the moment it's still a social-media company, one that reported one million fewer daily active users last quarter and a slowdown in advertising sales. Tech reporter Meghan Bobrowsky joins host Zoe Thomas to discuss how investors are reacting and what it means for the wider tech landscape.

0354 GMT - Global cloud spending, which has been soaring since 2020 thanks to rising digital activity, could further expand thanks to growing metaverse-related services and applications, market research firm Canalys says. Its data shows that worldwide cloud services expenditure in 4Q grew 34% to an all-time quarterly high of $53.5 billion. This record could be topped in the coming quarters, driven by the trend of immersive computing such as the metaverse, Canalys says. These services require even more cloud capacity than more conventional forms of internet applications, and could support steady rises in cloud spending for years to come, the research firm says. You'll see the magic unfold right before your eyes The year I entered college was when dial-up modems were introduced, and when I started playing Dune-thanks to my younger brother who installed it in our personal computer with a pack of 3.5 floppy diskettes. It was my first taste of playing an adventure strategy game via the computer, and I got hooked.

But that wasn't the first time I played video games. Like most, my brothers and I had fun with gaming console units from Atari, Nintendo, Sega, Playstation. You name it, we had it! In between, we had the game & watch handy consoles that evolved into more challenging flip versions, which eventually was taken over by Nintendo Gameboy handhelds. Then, everyone wanted a Nintendo switch.

The metaverse is definitely the tech buzz word of 2021. If you're not yet onboard with the latest innovation and the news surrounding it-perhaps due to its intimidating stance or confusing jargon-don't worry as that world has yet to exist. But in general terms, the metaverse is "the convergence of two ideas that have been around for many years: virtual reality and a digital second life," according to The New York Times.

With our virtual persona being an integral part of experiencing the metaverse, it goes without saying that our cars will have to be linked to our virtual lives as well.

Improving convenience for customers Ever since Facebook CEO, Mark Zuckerberg first mentioned "metaverse" in his company's online rebranding presentation last year, the term has taken off and entered the public consciousness. While many may think it's simply restricted to social media, the idea of meeting, conversing, and transacting with others virtually has actually been a sci-fi dream for some time.

The metaverse may seem complicated, but one only need to watch recent films like "Ready Player One" and "Free Guy," to see just how it's capable of transforming our lives. They may be works of fiction, but the technology available today could soon make this dream a reality. In fact, some car companies have already integrated some elements of the metaverse into the way they do business now.

1043 ET - Hype around the metaverse is growing within the mobile-app market, says analytics firm Sensor Tower. Over the past three months, 86 apps have added the term to their title or description, bringing the total of top-ranking apps that use it to 552. Mobile games make up the largest category mentioning the metaverse, followed by finance and social. Sensor Tower attributes the trend to Facebook changing its name to Meta in late October. Investors were hoping that Facebook parent Meta Platforms would continue where Google parent Alphabet left off and keep the market momentum going.

Instead they got an outlook so bad it has sent seismic shock waves through the internet sector. Meta stock plummeted 20% in premarket trading Thursday. A similar performance in regular trading would see the stock have its worst ever day.

HONG KONG, Feb. 2, 2022 /PRNewswire/ — Snapask, the Hong Kong-based one-stop online learning platform launched the "Planet of the Plants" project, an Ethereum-based Metaverse with NFTs (Non-fungible tokens) to reveal their vision for the future. The first 10 plant-themed NFTs are released today at 02:02 am (GMT) and each NFT is a rare species of plants such as pachypodium and agave. The "Planet of the Plants" Metaverse comes with different interactive zones such as incubation labs and planting areas. Designed to engage both plant owners and players, it allows them to not only grow plants, but also gain rewards.

One thing they don't tell you about working out in the metaverse: The exercise might be in virtual reality, but the sweat is real.

My first VR exercise was a boxing class that's like "Dance Dance Revolution" for your hands. I punched color-coded targets zooming at my face and tilted to avoid swirling bars. After the session, I peeled the damp Meta Quest 2 (formerly known as Oculus) off my face—which is just as disgusting as it sounds. But there's an upside: I couldn't believe how hard my heart was pumping and how fast those 20 minutes flew by.

Facebook's plans to build a $10bn virtual reality world were ridiculed yet the rest of Silicon Valley has serious Fomo and is piling in

Once upon a time, a very long time ago – until Thursday 28 October 2021, to be precise – the term “metaverse” was known only to lexicographers and science fiction enthusiasts. And then, suddenly, it was everywhere. How come? Simply this: Mark Zuckerberg, the supreme leader of Facebook, pissed off by seeing nothing but bad news about his company in the media, announced that he was changing its name to Meta and would henceforth be devoting all his efforts – plus $10bn (£7bn) and thousands of engineers – to building a parallel universe called the metaverse.

Influencer Marketing works where there are people to influence, and fortunately or unfortunately, the entire generations of millennials and gen Z are entering the digital world of the metaverse. For most brands and companies, marketing becomes more effective when their target audience is concentrated at one place or one space for that matter.
